Co-habitation

1 Your cohabitation rights

There is a common myth known as "common law husband or wife". Essentially meaning that you have some of the same rights in cohabitation as you do in marriage. This myth has no legal standing.

Unlike marriage, couples are not granted rights by the law.

If you move in to your partners property, and then you separate, you will have no rights to the property.

Finances are also not split upon separation. No matter how long you and your partner were together, you do not gain any rights.
